Hi (10)(2e)

Here are also the comments from (10)(2e). His comments are very much supportive of John's comments. And some more food for thought for next studies.

And yes, it is preferable that a more extended version will be available to be shared with press & public.

Your conclusion from this study that there is no indication of more or less distancing with voluntary use of non-medical face masks in public space is an important one as well as distancing and hygiene are the most important behavioral rules we have nowadays for those not infected nor having been in close contact with infected cases.

Success!

P.s. busy times for all of us, keep up the good work!
